INTRODUCTION

This report explores the potential energies available for you in any particular location in the world. The report has evolved from a technique called astro-mapping, which overlays your chart on a map of the world using various methods. This overlay means that certain planets will be stronger in particular geographical areas. Through interpreting these planetary energies we can have an astrological map which tells us the best place to apply for promotions, to go on holidays, to meet lovers, and to live more fulfilled lives in the areas that are important to us.

The different lines listed in this report include Planet/Angle , Planet Direction and Paran lines.

Planet/Angle Lines describe where on the Earth individual planets or stars are culminating or anticulminating (or on the Midheaven and Imum Coeli) or are rising or setting (or on the Ascendant or Descendant). The Culminate/Anticulminate and MC/IC lines are always lines of longitude, whereas the rising/setting and Asc/Dsc lines are great circles around the globe and appear to curve on a map viewed in Cartesian or Mercator projection.

Planet Direction or Local Space Lines indicate the direction in which planets or stars are found when looking from the chart's location. These lines are great circles around the globe, starting from the chart's location. The common convention is to continue the line right around the world, back to the starting location. When viewed in Cartesian or Mercator projection, these lines generally appear to curve.

Paran Lines are lines of latitude, indicating where any two astronomical bodies (eg. planets or stars) are in an angular relationship which coincides with the angular relationship between the meridian and horizon at that latitude. For example, if the angle between the Sun and Saturn is the same as that between the meridian and the horizon, for a particular latitude, then there is a paran line for the Sun Culminating/Saturn Rising along that latitude.

Let the explorations begin.
